The Pedigogical association of Cincinnati rec ntly held an interesting discussion on teaching grammar in the public schols. A recort providing for or all language lessons in Gride G of the primary schools war adopted. In teaching by this method sentences are given which contain perhaps two ideas, ochave two objects. For example: "John has apple;" "John has apples." The pupil puts them together and says: "John and Jane has apples." The correction is made: "John and Jane have apples." As the pup leadvance short narratives aucceed, and the exercises grow breader, the thought less simple and the logical distinctions are more closely of served. Superintendent Pesslee said that he toped the day was not far distant when the inculcation of orrectlanguage, logically, will take rank in importance as mental drill before mathematics.
